

LIBER 555: TRANSITUS AD LIBERTATEM

leister Crowley once said that: "But for the Aspirant that cometh unto the Master, the first need is freedom." - Liber CL Absolute freedom has its purpose, one of which is the evolution of consciousness and the self. Having the freedom just to move a little here or there limits one from developing completely. If we cannot move with absolute freedom, how then can we develop completely? Our purpose requires us to move and act freely. The progression of humanity in every cycle known in the Universe is only possible by free movement and expression.

Bearing this in mind, we must insist that slavery, the condition of limited movement or the complete stagnation of movement, should be abolished completely and freedom be addressed as a priority in each and everyone's life.

Lo and behold, ALL governments, religions, and money, or any system that (potentially) creates a master-servant relationship is per definition, slavery. Slavery will prevent you from developing your potential in many ways. A life in bondage is not a life worth living, hence, every individual must stand for the right to be free and completely so. We should always strive to do things the right way even if more often than not, it is often the hard way. If you really want to do something, you might as well do it right, otherwise, what is the point of doing it? If our development to a higher standard and consciousness is worth the effort, then why not do it right?

There is no other way. There is no shortcut. If all else stays equal in this World, the first pressing need above all else is ABSOLUTE FREEDOM.

Edward

